LIST OF THE RADICALS.

In this list, the number, sound, and leading signification of each radical are given; the letter C attached to some of them denotes that such are generally used in combination; the contractions placed after the full form of others are always found in combination. The figures which follow the meaning show firstly, the number of characters following each radical in the K'anghi Tsz'-tien; and secondly, the number given in this dictionary, which comprise all those in common use.

CHARACTERS IN THIS DICTIONARY

ARRANGED BY THEIR RADICALS.

In this Index, the figures placed above each character show the page on which it occurs; and these numbers are arranged so that the characters under each radical, having the same number of strokes, follow each other in alphabetical order; the figures on the right side of the column in heavy type, shows how many strokes, not including the radical itself, are in each character following it. The sound of each character, where it is known, is given in the Canton, Amoy, and Shanghai dialects in that order, according to a uniform system of spelling.

LIST OF DIFFICULT CHARACTERS.

THE following table contains a selection of all the characters occurring in the preceding Index whose radicals are not very obvious, being combined with other parts or placed in unusual positions. They are arranged in classes by the whole number of their strokes in a regular series ;

the figures after each one denote its radical and additional strokes in the Index. Characters in which the difficulty of finding their place chiefly consists in the choice of the right radical out of two or three, as 攴 or 矧, are not often inserted.

LIST OF THE FAMILY SURNAMES OF THE CHINESE, BOTH SINGLE AND DOUBLE.

The following list has been collected from the common school-book known as the 百家姓 or Family Surnames, and from K'ang-hi's Dictionary; those contained in the former, numbering 408 單姓 or single surnames, and 30 複姓 or 雙姓 double surnames, are distinguished by being printed in italics. Probably four-fifths of the people are called by these surnames, the rest being seldom used or extinct. Native authors have carefully investigated their origin, and traced them back, in some cases more than three thousand years, to the time when they are first mentioned. A few tens of those contained in this list are characters not found in this Dictionary, their use being almost confined to that of a proper name; a few others, like Feu 不 or Hang 汗, take a different sound when used as surnames. All are arranged alphabetically on the same plan as the Dictionary. When mentioning their surnames, the Chinese have a custom of dissecting the parts, so as the better to define it when there is any doubt; 二馬馮 two-horse Fung; 木子李 wooden-son Li; 弓長張 bow-long Chang; 立早章 stand-early Chang; 文武武 Wên-Wu Wu; &c.

In writing Chinese proper names in Roman letters, the sing and ming should be carefully distinguished as two names, as noted on page 810, and not printed as one word, as is often done to their utter confusion. The Manchus were required by the Emperor K'anghi to use only their ming in writing their names in Chinese, so that the sing is known only among themselves, like a kind of clan sign; such names, therefore, as Yuen-yuen or O-keh-tun-pu are properly written in one word, as much as Benjamin or Christopher, though the syllables may be separated for convenience of pronunciation.

ERRATA AND CORRECTIONS.

SINCE the issue of the first edition of this book in 1874, its merits have been fairly discussed, its deficiencies pointed out, and its errors set forth by several friendly critics and scholars. Their suggestions will be useful to those who may, by and by, undertake a similar work. From their remarks the following list has been mostly selected, as containing the errors most desirable to be corrected. As their notices are scattered here and there, their intentions in making them will be promoted by bringing them together. In respect to the explanation of the construction of characters, a reference may be made to page xlvi. of the Introduction, where the object is stated; some mistakes were made in discriminating the component parts, but the main design was to aid beginners to remember the leading portions of characters, rather than to give all their etymologies. In addition to the dialects given in the Index, Miss A. M. FIELDE, of the American Baptist Mission at Swatow, has published a complete list of the sounds of all the characters in that dialect, including many variants; and Mr. JAMES ACHESON, of the Imperial Customs, has issued another list giving the Peking sounds according to Sir T. F. WADE's Progressive Course. All sinologues will be thankful for these lists. A full collection of the vocables in the best defined and leading dialects in the empire will furnish accurate materials for comparisons and deductions, which may enable some philologist, like GRIMM or WHITNEY, to ascertain the genesis of Chinese pronunciation, and the laws which govern its perplexing changes.

- 1087<sup>1</sup> The 鼯 is the 地拍 or 地拍鼠 the ground rat, (Scaptochirus moschatus) a small mole common in Chihli and North China.
- 1092<sup>2</sup> bottom. The 鷓 has also been defined the chough (Pregilus graculus), for which 紅嘴鴉 or red billed raven is the Peking raven.
- 1094<sup>1</sup> The composition of 華 is apparently 日 eye over 幸 lucky; but the primitive is an old form of 卒 to scare. See also 圍 on page 1126<sup>1</sup>.
- 1093<sup>3</sup> The game referred to under 弈 is the 圍碁 or game of war or blockade, here incorrectly called chess; Mr. Giles has given an account of it in Temple Bar, January, 1877.
- 1100<sup>1</sup> The component parts of 音 are 言 words with 一 in mouth, alluding to modulations in music.
- 1106<sup>2</sup> The tassel on an official hat is 馬纓; and the silk tree 絨花樹 (Julibrissin) seems to have the fitting name of 馬纓花 tassel flower sometimes applied to it.
- 1115<sup>1</sup> The phrase 坐又不安 is better rendered, Neither could he sit easy.
- 1116<sup>2</sup> The 鼬 probably denotes the polecat (Putorius Fontanierii and schiricus) for which 性鼠 is another name.
- 1120<sup>2</sup> The second form 予 is also used as a common synonym of 與 to give.
- 1122<sup>3</sup> bottom. A better version is, To thoroughly ascertain the feeling of the people.
- 1123<sup>1</sup> top. This bird is the eastern jackdaw (Lycos daurica).
- 1125<sup>2</sup> bottom. Correct the italics to One debate between two men.
- 1133<sup>1</sup> Under 原, instead of "but the next form is oldest," read, It is the origin of the next, which is now confined to a spring, and had another form of three fountains under a cliff, now disused.
- 1135<sup>2</sup> The 爰書 is the record of a case appealed to a higher court, and sent with the prisoner.
- 1140<sup>1</sup> top. The phrase 抑鬱不伸 is better rendered, Oppressed without remedy; no relief from my misery.
- 1141 Confucius is said in the Lun-yü not to have trodden on the threshold when entering the court.
