1,000,000		百萬 Hyaku-man.
100,000,000		億 Oku.
	&c.	&c.

Mitsu no toshi.	The age of three, or three years old.
Jūni no ishizue.	Twelve foundation-stones.
Futa-gokoro.	Double-minded.
Shijūshichi-shi.	Fortyseven samurai.

Kura nana tomæ.	Seven store-houses.
Hatu ya-nagare.	Eight streamers.
Ki kokoro-moto.	Nine trees.
Kami to-hashira.	Ten gods.

Here follow examples of auxiliary numbers of the second kind:—

Uo ichi-bi.	One fish.
Neko ni-hiki.	Two cats.
Uma san-tō.	Three horses.
Ikushi-ken.	Four houses.
Shoseki go-kwan.	Five volumes of books.
Mizu rop-pai.	Six glasses of water.
Ono shichi-chō.	Seven axes.
Basha hachi-ryō.	Eight coaches.
Isu ku-kyaku.	Nine chairs.
Fune jis-sō.	Ten boats.
Bunsho jūit-tsū.	Eleven letters.
Maki jūni-wa.	Twelve bundles of wood.
Uta jūsan-shu.	Thirteen poems.
Kami jūshi-mai.	Fourteen sheets of paper.
Tabi jūgo-soku.	Fifteen pairs of stockings.

From these examples, it is apparent at a glance that there can be no definite rule covering all cases of the use of auxiliary numerals. They must be learned by practice.

ORDINAL NUMBERS.

The Japanese language has no special distinction in form between cardinal and ordinal numbers. Very frequently, however, the word dai is placed before the number when used in the latter sense.

Sangwatsu jūgo nichi. The fifteenth day of the third month.

Dai issshō. The first chapter.

Sometimes the suffixes me and ban are used to denote ordinal numbers.

Shichō-me, san-banchi. The fourth street, the third number.

AUXILIARY NUMBERS.

It is rather rare in Japanese to place numerals directly before the nouns that they limit. As a rule, the numerals with some auxiliary qualifiers after them, follow the noun. There are two kinds of such auxiliary words, as there are two kinds of the numerals, one of Japanese origin, and the other, of Chinese.

Here follow examples of auxiliary numbers of the first kind:—

Tachi hito-furi.	One sword.
Yumi futa-hari.	Two bows.
Tori ni-tsugai.	Three pairs of fowls.
Obi yo-suji.	Four belts.
Kimono itsu-kasane.	Five suits of garments.
Tansu mu-sao.	Six loads of bureaus.

THE VERB.

The Japanese verb being different in its nature from the verb of European languages, it seems inadvisable to draw too strict a comparison between the two. The Japanese verb has no person or number. The different forms of tense and mood are expressed by changes of final vowels and by auxiliary suffixes. The conjugations are of primary importance, and some space will, therefore, be devoted here to their exposition.

REGULAR CONJUGATIONS.

The roots of verbs constitute the bases for inflections indicating differences of mood and tense. Every verbal root ends in a vowel, which sometimes changes and sometimes remains unchanged. In the process of inflection. In the table of the Gofū-on, or Fifty Sounds, the vowels are arranged in the order a, i, u, e, and o. Japanese grammarians refer the conjugations of the verbs to that order. That is to say, they take the negative, indefinite, conclusive, attributive, and conditional bases, and comparing their vowel endings (i. e. the changes that the root vowel has undergone) with the vowel series of the Gofū-on, classify the conjugations by means of the comparison. Verbs in which these bases show the vowel endings a, i, u, and e—o never occurs—are called "godan no hataraki-kotoba," or "verbs of the four-grade conjugation." An example is the verb yuku (to go). Its negative base is yuka; its indefinite form, yuki; its conclusive form, yuku; its attributive form, yuku, and its conditional base, yuke. Hence the changes of the final vowels follow the order a, i, u, e, and the verb is of the four-grade conjugation. Verbs in which the vowel ending of the five forms is i, remaining unchanged throughout, are classed as "Kami-ichidan no hataraki-kotoba," or "verbs of the upper one grade conjugation." An example is the verb niru (to boil). Its five forms are ni, ni, ni(ru), ni(ru) and ni(re); the vowel remaining unchanged. (N.B.—It should be noted that the suffixes ru and re do not affect the classification, which is determined by the vowel ending of the verb itself). Again, verbs in which the vowel ending of the five forms is e, remaining unchanged throughout, are classed as "shimo-ichidan no hataraki-kotoba," or "verbs of the lower one grade conjugation." An example is the verb keru (to kick). Its five forms are ke, ke, ke(ru), ke(ru) and ke(re). (N.B.—The distinction "upper one-grade" and "lower one-grade" refers simply to the fact that i stands above e in the Fifty Sounds). Verbs in which the vowel endings are i and u, receive the name "kami-nidan no hataraki-kotoba," or "verbs of the upper two grade conjugation." An example is kuyuru (to repent), of which the five forms are kuyi (or kui), kui, kuyuru(ru), kuyuru(ru) and kuyuru(re). Finally, verbs in which the vowel endings take the order e and u, are classed as "shimo-nidan no hataraki-kotoba," or "lower two-grade conjugation." An example is the verb ukuru (to receive), of which the forms are uke, uke, uku(ru) uku(ru) and ukure.

The following paradigm will help to elucidate the above distinctions, which are given here because they represent the pure Japanese grammatical analysis.—

	The four-grade conjugation of the verb yuku (to go).	The upper one-grade conjugation of the verb niru (to boil)	The lower one-grade conjugation of the verb keru (to kick).	The upper two-grade conjugation of the verb kuyuru (to repent).	The lower two-grade conjugation of the verb ukuru (to receive).
I	yuka	ni	ke	kui	uke
II.	yuki	ni	ke	kui	uke
III.	yuku	ni (ru)	ke (ru)	kuyuru	uku
IV.	yuku	ni (ru)	ke (ru)	kuyuru (ru)	uku (ru)
V	yuke	ni (re)	ke (re)	kuyuru (re)	uku (re)

The first horizontal division represents the verbal bases for conditional, future and negative inflection; thus:

Yuka-ba.	If (I) go.
Ni-zu.	(I) do not cook.
Ke-nu.	(I) do not kick.
Kui-u.	(I) will repent.
Uke-de.	(I) not receiving.

The second division represents the verbal forms as used for compounding with other words. The second members with which they combine may be nouns, adjectives, or verbs. Thus:

Yuki ki.	Going and coming.
Ni nikuki.	Difficult to boil.
Ke-taosu.	To kick down.
Kui-aratamuru.	To repent and regenerate.
I'ke-tori.	A receipt.

The same forms may also be used as substantives; thus,

Hikari (hikara, hikaru, hikare),	Light.
Kasumi (kasuma, kasumu, kasume).	Haze.
Koi (kou).	Love.
Hate (hatsu).	The end.

They are also called indefinite forms, because they may denote any tense or mood according to the form of the last verb of the sentence in which they occur, provided that they are grammatically connected with that verb and stand in the same relation to it.

Kaze yami, ten nare.	The wind ceases, the sky clears up. [sing.]
Hana warai, tori utau.	Flowers smile, and birds
Kami wo uyamai, kimi ni tsukae, kuni wo ai-subeshi.	Revere the Kami, serve the Monarch, and love the country.

The third division represents the verbs in their conclusive forms; thus:

Hito ga yuku.	The man goes.
Onna ga kome wo niru.	The maid boils rice.
Uma ga kodomo wo keru.	The horse kicks a boy.
Ware wa waga tsumi wo kuyu.	I repent of my sins.
Ware wa megumi wo uku.	I receive favour.

The fourth division represents the verbs in their attributive forms; thus:

Yuku haru.	The spring that is passing away.
Onna ga niru kome.	The rice that the maid boils.
Keru uma.	The horse that kicks.
Waga kuyuru tsumi.	The sins that I repent of.
Waga ukuru megumi.	The favour that I receive.

These forms become substantives, also, the nouns qualified being understood; thus:

Tōkyō ni yuku (koto) wa konomashikarazu.	Going to Tōkyō is not desirable.
Kome wo niru (koto) ni wa hō ari.	There is a method for boiling rice.
Uma no keru (toki) made tadazumeri.	(I) stood until the horse kicked (me).
Waga kuyuru (mono) wa waga tsumi nari.	What I repeat is my sin.
Kane wo ukuru (tame) ni tegata wo yōsu.	For receiving money, a cheque is required.

Practically, the same forms may be considered in some cases as conjunctive forms; thus:

Tōkyō ni yuku yue ni.	Since (I) go to Tōkyō.
Kane wo ukuru toki ni.	When (I) receive money.

The fifth division represents the verbal bases for conditional, conjunctive and concessive forms.

Yuke-do.	Though (I) go.
Kome wo nire-domo.	Though (I) boil rice.
Uma wa keredomo.	Though the horse kicks.
Tsumi mo kuyure-ba.	As (I) repent of (my) sins.
Uino wo ukure-ba.	When I receive anything

Another conditional form is obtained by suffixing ba to the negative base ending in a; as yuku-ba. It is to be noted, however, that this second form has a different signification from the first. The following examples will explain the distinction:—

Yama wo kose ba mura ari.	If one cross the mountain, there is a village.
Yama wo kosa-ba mura aran.	If one crosses the mountain, there will be a village.

The former simply states the fact, while the latter is hypothetical. In the same way, the particles do and domo added to the verbal forms in this fifth division impart the significance of a definite concessive, while the particle tomo added to the conclusive forms gives the force of a hypothetical concessive; thus:

Sono oshie wo ukure-do, sono hito wo shin-zezu.	Though (I) receive his instructions, (I) do not believe in him.
Sono oshie wo uku-tomo, sono hito wo shinzezararu.	Though (I) receive his instructions, (I) shall not believe in him.

The majority of Japanese verbs belong to the four-grade conjugation. Next in number, are the verbs of the lower two-grade, and then those of the upper two-grade. Of those of the upper and lower one grades there are only a few. In the colloquial, the forms in the third, fourth and fifth divisions in the upper two-grade, and those of the same divisions in the lower two-grade, are changed from u, uru and ure, into iru, iru and ire, and eru, eru and ere, respectively. Thus, to take the verb kuyuru of the upper two-grade conjugation, the third form kuyuu	is changed into kui (ru),

the fourth form kuyuru (ru)	„ „ „ kui (ru);
the fifth form kuyu (re)	„ „ „ kui (re);

and to take the verb ukuru of the lower two-grade,

the third form uku	is changed into uke (ru),
the fourth form ukuru (ru)	„ „ „ uke (ru);
the fifth form uku (re)	„ „ „ uke (re).

IRREGULAR CONJUGATIONS.

There are six irregular conjugations in Japanese verbs. They are called, first, the Ka yō, Sa-gyō and Na-gyō honkaku; or the K column, S column and N column of irregular conjugations:—

	The K column conjugation, or the conjugation of the verb kiru (to come).	The S column conjugation, or the conjugation of the verb suru (to do).	The N column conjugation, or the conjugation of the verb inu (to go away).
1	ku	se	ina
2	ki	shi	ini
3	ku	su	inu
4	ku(n)	su(n)	inu(n)
5	ku(re)	su(re)	inu(re)

The different forms in the five horizontal divisions correspond with those of the regular conjugations, and no explanations are needed here.

When substantive words act as verbs, it is a rule to suffix the verb suru to them, and then they become verbs of the S column conjugation; thus.

Nami (naught)+suru (to make)=namisuru (to nullify).

Karoku (light)+suru (to make)=karokusuru, or karozuru (to make light of).

These verbs are conjugated thus:

Namise, namishi, namisu, namisuru, namisure.

Karonze, karonzi, karonzu, karonzuru, karonzure.

Chinese words, when they act as verbs behave in the same manner.

Kan (feeling)+suru (to do)=kanzuru (to feel).
Ron (argument)+suru (to do)=ronzuru (to argue).

These verbs are conjugated thus:

Kanze, kanzi, kanzu, kanzuru, kanzure.

Ronze, ronzi, ronzu, ronzuru, ronzure.

Secondly, we have the

Ra-gyō henkaku, or the R column irregular conjugations:—

Of these there are three kinds; the first is primary, and the second and the third are derivatives. The first is the conjugation of the verb aru (to be), while the second and the third are those of compound words, one formed of the principal verb and the verbal suffix, aru; the other, formed of an adjective and the same verbal suffix.

	The conjugation of the verb aru (to be).	The conjugation of the verb akeru * (to be wearied).	The conjugation of the verb yokaru * (to be good).
I	aru	akera	yokara
II	ari	akeri	yokari
III	ari	akeri	yokari
IV	aru	akeru	yokaru
V	are	akere	yokare

The differences between the regular four-grade conjugation and the irregular R column conjugations are: first, that the conclusive form ends in i instead of u; second, that the particles belonging to this form are only the conjunctive to and the concessive tomo, all others properly belonging to it being transferred to the attributive form. In other respects there is no alteration.

It must be remarked here that, in the second conjugation, the first form, akera, the second form, akeri, and the fifth form, akere, have generally become obsolete, and that in the third conjugation, the fifth form (conditional and concessive) are has changed into ere, as yokare into yokere. But for expressing desire or command, are is still used.

THE MOOD AND THE TENSE.

Bearing in mind that the moods and tenses of Japanese verbs do not exactly correspond with those of the verbs in European languages, and that the terms used to designate them are sometimes arbitrary rather than natural or scientific, we proceed to arrange the tenses and moods in such a manner that their relations will be easily appreciated.†

* Uru-ari+aru = yokaru = yoku+aru.

INTRODUCTION.

THE STRUCTURE OF JAPANESE WORDS.

While it is still a matter of conjecture whether the Japanese language is allied to Chinese, Korean, Mongol or Manchoo, or to any one of the Malayan family, it is certain that in the structure of its words it is still in what is called the agglutinative style. Although some of their roots appear very obscure, words can, in most cases, be easily separated into their component parts. Close observation will show that new words are formed mostly by mere changes of suffix. For example:

Aku (verb)	to open.
Akegata (noun)	the dawn.
Akiraka-ni (adverb).	clearly.
Akaki (adjective).	red.
Akaru (verb)	to become bright.
Akari (noun)	the light.
Usuru (verb)	to vanish.
Usinaw (verb)	to lose.
Usuki (adjective).	thia.
Uso (noun)	empty talk, lie.

In the colloquial language of the present day, many words are already in the inflectional or amalgamating stage, so that it requires an experienced eye to distinguish the roots from prefixes and suffixes. Thus, the dignified form goza-ari-masu or gozarimasu (it is) changes in common speech into the following forms:

gozaimasu.	gozarimasu.
gozansu.	goansu.
gozassu.	gansu.
goassu.	gonsu.
goasu.	gosu.
gasu.	gesu.

CHINESE CHARACTERS.

Old words (古言) of more than one thousand years ago have been preserved through the aid of written characters. They show general agreement in their structure with words of the present language, the changes produced since then being comparatively unimportant. But the beginning of the use of the written characters must have created an epoch in the history of the language. Some believe that the Japanese had their own alphabet, invented in a remote antiquity, which, when closely examined, shows a marked resemblance to the Korean alphabet. But authorities agree that no such alphabet did ever exist, and that the alphabet mentioned was of uncertain origin, probably borrowed from Korea. However that may be, it is unquestionable that, at first, the Japanese depended exclusively upon Chinese characters for conveying their ideas by written signs.

History records that the introduction of Chinese characters took place in the year 285, A.D., though the date was probably earlier than that. They are said to have been brought to Japan by a Korean embassy. The pronunciation then used is called the Go-on, or Wu pronunciation, from the name of the kingdom of Go (吳) or Wu, which comprised most of the eastern provinces south of the Yangtsekiang. There, including Wu, six dynasties flourished one after another in the period ranging from the third to the sixth century, and their capitals became centres of learning and seats of refinement. There might have been direct communication going on between that region and Japan, for in attempting to account for the general prevalence of the Go-on in the latter about that time, Korea seems too far north to serve as a connecting link. The strong probability, however, is that the so called earlier Go-on used in old Japanese writings came from Northern China. There are evidences that the pronunciation prevailing in Loyang and Changan, the two northern capitals, before the fourth century, was nearly the same as that of Wu.

During the seventh and ninth centuries, different embassies were sent to northern China, to the courts of the Sui (隋) and the Tang (唐) dynasties.

Thus the pronunciation prevailing in that part of China in those times was introduced to Japan. It was eagerly learned in the court, and, as a matter of course, the Go-on began to be despised as a simple country dialect of southern China. Enthusiasm went even so far that proclamations were issued by the government to forbid the use of the Go-on. Naturally these interdicts did not succeed. The new pronunciation seems to have been different from the so-called Kan-on or *Han (漢) pronunciation now widely used in Japan; but it is an undoubted fact that the latter was the natural outgrowth of this new pronunciation.

It must be remarked here that what are now called the Go-on and Kan-on are the Japanese sounds of the Chinese pronunciations. They are now so different from the original Chinese that one might hardly suspect the existence of any relation between the two. But that the former are modifications of the latter is not difficult to trace. The following are examples:—

Go on.

Eyōki or byōki (病氣, illness).
Gwammō or gwammou (渴望, desire).
Konnichi or Komuchichi (今日, today).
Kubu or Gubu (供奉, attendance).
Muhō or muhou (無法, lawless).
Rusu (留守, absence).
Shūjiki or shaujiki (正直, honest).
Tōkyō or Toukyan (東京, Tongkysang).

Kan on.

Bōcho or Bauchau (膨脹, swelling).
Engoku or engoku (遠國, distant country).
Heihō or heilhou (兵法, military tactics).
Kandan (寒暖, cold and hot).
Kwōka or Kwanka (黃河, Hoang Ho).
Neiha (寧波, Ningpō).
Seutō or Seutau (筭筭).
Bushō or Bushau (武昌).

As intercourse with China increased, a great number of new words, mainly Chinese expressions, were added to the Japanese vocabulary, and as the Go-on spread, accompanying the progress of Buddhism, so the Kan-on spread, following the progress of Confucianism. Though the official and literary classes employ Kan-on in preference to Go-on, usage has become so arbitrary in the modern language, that in some places the Kan-on, in others the Go-on, and in still other places both combined or both indiscriminately, are used without any special reason.

Another thing to be mentioned here is that after the introduction of the Go-on, a method of writing the language by using Chinese characters for phonetic symbols became desirable. So, in the study of the Chinese characters, the first thing requisite was to know their ou (音) or pronunciation; and the next thing was to understand their kun (訓), or equivalents in Japanese, written with different Chinese characters as phonetic symbols, which themselves had no meaning, therefore, when thus employed. The characters so used are called the Man-yō Gana (万葉假名).

Comparing the Chinese characters in current use, it is interesting to see how they sometimes convey different meanings according as they are read with kun or Go-on or Kan-on. For example:

變化: henge (Go-on) means an apparition; henkwa (Kan-on),—change.

生靈: setrei (Kan-on) means a soul; shōryō (Go-on),—the spirit of the deceased; iki ryō (Kun and Go-on combined),—the spirit of a living person.

御門: gomon (Kan-on),—a gate; mikado (kun),—an emperor.

干物: Kambutsu (Kan-on),—dried vegetables, hi mono (kun),—dried fish.

卷物: Nōmotsu (Go-on),—a book; kakimono (kun),—any thing written.

木綿: momen (Go-on),—cotton cloth; kiwata (kun),—tree cotton.

Intercourse with China at a later period led to

* The Han dynasties reigned from 202 B.C. to 264 A.D. In Japan, the name Han is sometimes used synonymously with China.

the introduction of the Tō on (唐音), or T'ang pronunciation, which somewhat resembles the modern Chinese. The vocabulary belonging to this pronunciation is comparatively small. Two or three examples will be enough.

行燈, a lamp, is read andon (Tō-on) instead of kōdō (Kan-on).
 普調, building, " " fushin (") " " fuset (").
 石灰, lime cement, " " shikkui (") " " sekkwai (").
 胡亂, uncertain, " " uron (") " " koran (").

KANA.

As the phonetic representations of words and syllables became more important and necessary, the Chinese characters were found to be too cumbersome and inconvenient. To meet this difficulty, some time in the eighth or ninth century, the katakana, or side-syllables, were invented by taking certain strokes from the Chinese characters. By some this invention is ascribed to Kibi, a high official in the court of the Emperor Kwōnin; by others, to Kūkai, a noted Buddhist priest. Perhaps following the Indian alphabet, the syllables were arranged according to what is called yūfū-on, or "the fifty sounds," five of which are the vowels. This method is still in general use.

TABLE OF THE FIFTY SOUNDS.

ア a	カ ka	サ sa	タ ta	ナ na	ハ ha	マ ma	ヤ ya	ラ ra	ワ wa
イ i	キ ki	シ shi	チ chi	ニ ni	ヒ hi	ミ mi	リ ri	ヰ pi
ウ u	ク ku	ズ zu	ツ tsu	ヌ nu	フ fu	ム mu	ユ yu	ル ru	ウ u
エ e	ケ ke	ゼ ze	テ te	ネ ne	ヘ he	メ me	エ e	レ re	ヱ e
オ o	コ ko	ソ so	ト to	ノ no	ホ ho	モ mo	ヨ yo	ロ ro	ヲ o

To this list, the following daku-on (impure sounds), or sonants, and handaku-on, or half sonants formed from the letter P, which are really surds, are to be added.

ハ ha	ヰ pi	ダ da	バ ba	ヱ pe
キ gi	シ zi	ヂ ji	ヒ bi	ヰ pi
ク gu	ズ zu	ツ zu	フ bu	ヰ pu
ケ ge	ゼ ze	テ de	ヘ be	ヰ pe
コ go	ソ zo	ノ do	ホ bo	ヰ po

While there may have been distinctions between i and pi, e and ye, in former times, it admits of no question that wi, we, and wo changed into i, e and o at a later period. Also, that there were formerly clear distinctions between zi and ji, zu and dsu, is a matter not to be doubted. Besides these, it may be possible that ta, chi, tsu, te, to were originally ta, ti, tu, te, to; da, ji, zu, de, do were da, di, du, de, do; and ha, hi, fu, he, ho, were fa, fi, fu, fe, fo.

The use of katakana was somewhat inconvenient in writing, and, therefore, for service in writing the running hand, the hirakana, or smooth letters, were invented, which feat also is ascribed to Kūkai. He used forty-seven letters,—two letters for i, e, and u each being unnecessary,—the whole making a poem in the following order:

ウ (i) ヲ (ro) ン (ha) ヲ (ni) ン (ho) ン (he) ヲ (to), ヲ (chi) ヲ (ri) ン (nu) ヲ (ru) ヲ (wo) ヲ (wa) ヲ (ka), ヲ (yo) ヲ (to) ヲ (re) ヲ (so) ヲ (tsu) ン (ne) ヲ (na), ヲ (ra) ヲ (mu) ヲ (u) ヲ (wi) ヲ (no), ヲ (o) ヲ (ku), ヲ (ya) ヲ (na) ヲ (ke) ヲ (fu) ヲ (ko) ヲ (ye) ヲ (te), ヲ (a) ヲ (sa) ヲ (ki) ヲ (yu) ヲ (me) ヲ (mi) ヲ (shi), ヲ (we) ヲ (hi) ヲ (ma) ヲ (se) ヲ (su).

It must be remembered here, as before, that afterwards ye changed into e, and we, wi and wo, into e, i and o. There are some other ways of writing the hirakana, but the above is the simplest.

TRANSLITERATION.

The system adopted by the Rōmaji Kwai, or Romanization Society, requires twenty-two of the letters used in English, l and v having no corresponding sounds in Japanese, and q and x being disregarded. C is never used in its hard sound, or ç in its soft sound. The vowels a, e, i, o, u, have only one sound each, unless they are marked with the sign of long quantity.

a has the sound of a in father, but is shorter.

e " " " " e " men.

i " " " " i " machine.

o " " " " o " so, but is shorter.

u " " " " u " rule " " "

When a horizontal line is placed over them,

ō has the sound of o in bone, and

ū " the " " oo in moon

ā, ē and ī are seldom used, except in interjections. When such sounds occur, they are usually represented by doubling the letters, as aa and ii. When two vowels come together, as ai, au, iu, and ou, they should be pronounced separately. In some cases, as in the endings of verbs, the two vowels are written for the sake of symmetry, even though they are sounded together; as au in utau (to sing) pronounced uto, ou in yōu (to be drunk) pronounced yō, and uu in sukuu (to save) pronounced sukū.

The vowel i is usually short, and often loses its sound. Foreigners seem to have great difficulty in pronouncing such words as hito (man), and shita (tongue), which very nearly have the sound of h'ito and sh'ita. Not only i itself is lost when it enters the syllables of some words, but in many cases the consonants before it are dropped together with it. Thus :

Akaishi (赤石, the name of a place) changes into Akashi.
Idate (伊達 " " " person) " " Date.
Ashidachi (足立 " " " ") " " Adachi.
amishiro (網代 a fish-basket) " " ajiro.
hachisu (藪, the lotus) " " hasu.
tokigire (時切, momentary silence) " " togire.

The vowel u is also very short, and is sometimes inaudible; thus mokuroku (目錄, a list) is pronounced almost as mokrok

futari (兩人, two persons) is " " " f'iarl.
kasu (粕, dregs) " " " kas.
onmitsu (隱密, a detective) " " " onmits.

Generally speaking, u before ma, me and mo, should be pronounced like the consonant m; thus:

uma (馬, the horse) should be pronounced mma.
ume (梅, the plum-tree) " " " mmé.
umoregi (埋木, fossil-wood) " " " mmoregi.

Like i, u is dropped in the syllables of some words; thus:

Kawauchi (河内, the name of a province) changes into Kawachi.
Naruumi (鳴笛, " " " ") " " Narumi.
Toyoura (豊浦, " " " ") " " Toyora.

It must, however, be remarked that similar tendencies sometimes exist in the case of the vowels a, e and o, which have more distinct sounds.

The consonants are pronounced nearly like those of English.

F is not a labio-dental, as in English; the sound is made by letting the breath escape softly through the lips. This letter is never used except before u. It is highly probable that the old sounds of ha, hi, he and ho were also fa, fi, fe, and fo.

S before a, e, o and u, as sa, se, so and su, is pronounced as in English; but before i, sh is adopted instead of s, though this sound (ʃ) varies from sh to si according to localities. Se and its sound ze are pronounced she and je in many provinces of Kyūshū, and in some provinces along the western coast of the Main Island. Even sa is changed into sha in some cases, as, sake (鮭, salmon) is changed into shake.

samisen (三味線, a musical instrument) " " " shamisen.
sakuri (さくら, hiccough) " " " shakuri.
kusami (嚏, sneeze) " " " kushami.

PREFACE.

THE task of compiling a dictionary is attended with special obstacles in Japan, where, owing to the rapid introduction of new ideas from the Occident, and the development of institutions hitherto unknown in the country, such numbers of words are yearly added to the language that a vocabulary fairly comprehensive to-day is found defective to-morrow. Doubtless owing to that consideration, many able men, thoroughly competent to undertake the work, hesitate to attempt it, until the language shall have assumed a more finite character. But the authors of this dictionary, being sensible that if the present transition stage continue to deter lexicographers, the difficulties of the language for unaided students must grow constantly more embarrassing, resolved to aim at even partial success rather than to leave a general want unsatisfied. They fully appreciate the achievements of others in the same field, and the great value of such compilations as Dr. Hepburn's pioneer dictionary, the Vocabulary of Sir Ernest Satow and Mr. Ishibashi, and Mr. J. H. Gubbins' dictionary of Chinese-Japanese words. But the first of these has fallen far behind the time; the second was never intended to be comprehensive, and the third, excellent as it is, has only a limited scope. The present work will, it is hoped, meet an evident need and prove as free from defects and deficiencies as can reasonably be expected under the circumstances. The authors would fain have added an English-Japanese section, but it became apparent that to wait until that were possible must involve very inconvenient delay. They trust, however, that they will soon be in a position to place before the public an English-Japanese dictionary on the lines of the work that they have now completed after long and conscientious labour.

curacies, there are some good reasons for the old method of classification. Nevertheless, in this dictionary, we have followed, in company with modern grammarians, the English method of dividing the parts of speech.

THE NOUN.

The noun does not undergo syllabic change for the sake of distinguishing either case, gender or number.

Case is generally indicated by a te-ni-wo wa. The Nominative case is indicated by the particle wa or ga. For instance:

Hī wa kagayaku.	The sun shines.
Tori ga sacuru.	The bird sings.

The Possessive Case is indicated by the particle no or ga.

Hito no kokoro.	Man's mind.
Shizū ga ya.	A peasant's house.

The Objective Case in its accusative form is indicated by the particle wo; otherwise, by a postposition.

Hito wo korosu.	To kill a man.
Uma ni noru.	To ride on a horse.
Minato yetsuku.	To arrive at a port.
Kodomo to asobu.	To play with children.
Tōkyō made yuku.	To go to Tōkyō.
Ōsaka yori kaeru.	To return from Ōsaka.

Gender is, in most cases, to be judged from the context. In some cases, however, it is distinguished by prefixes or suffixes, which are really independent words.

Oto-ko.	A young man.	Oto-me.	A young woman.
Hi-ko.	A prince.	Hi-me.	A princess.
Iratsu-ko.	A young gentleman.	Iratsu-me.	A young lady.
Musu-ko.	A son.	Musu-me.	A girl.
Osu.	A male.	Mesu.	A female.
O-shibe.	The stamen.	Me-shibe.	The pistil.
O-jishi.	A lion.	Me-jishi.	A lioness.
On-dori.	A cock.	Men-dori.	A hen.
Dan-shi.	A mao or a boy.	Jo-shi.	A woman or a girl.
Nan-shi.

Sometimes, different words are used distinguish gender.

Otoko.	A man.	Onna.	A woman.
Chūchi.	Father.	Haha.	Mother.
Oji.	Uncle.	Oba.	Aunt.
Ani.	Elder brother.	Ane.	Elder sister.
Ōtō.	Younger brother.	Imōto.	Younger sister.

Number, like gender, has to be determined from the context. In some cases, however, the plural is indicated by suffixing different words, such as gata, tachi domo, ra, shū and hai.

Tono-gata.	Gentlemen.
Musuko-tachi.	Sons.
Kerat-domo.	Servants.
Musume-ra.	Girls.
Onna-shū.	Maids-servants.
Hyakushū-domo.	Farmers.

Sometimes the plural is indicated by an adjective expressing quantity, or by a numeral prefixed, but these cases scarcely need illustration.

Musū no hoshi.	Indnumerable stars.
Obitadashiki kembutsunin.	Very numerous observers.
Nthiki no inu.	Two dogs.
Ōku no akuji.	Many evils.

Such adjectives or numerals often become component prefixes.

Futa-tose.	Two years.
Yorozu-yo.	Ten-thousand generations.
Sho-nin.	Many persons.
Shū jin.

Sometimes, the plural is expressed by doubling the noun

Yama-yama.	All, or various mountains.
Kawa-gawa.	" " " rivers.
Tokoro-dokoro.	" " " places.
Hito bito.	" " " persons.

A large number of nouns consist of compound words.

1. Such a compound is formed by the combination of a noun with a noun.

Ten-chi or ame-tsuchi.	Heaven and earth.
Jitsu-getsu.	Sun and moon.
Sō-maku or kusa-ki.	Grasses and trees.

2. It is formed also by a combination of an adjective, or a noun used adjectively, with a noun.

Ko-ishi.	A small stone.
Ti-michi.	A long way.
Haya-gane.	An alarm-bell.
Tai-teki.	A great enemy.
Bi jin.	A beautiful woman.
Te-bukuro.	Gloves.
Hana kaze.	The wind of the sea-shore.
Yama-gawa.	A mountain torrent.
Kai-zoku.	A pirate.

3. It is formed also by combining a noun with a noun derived from an adjective or a verb.

Kuchi-warū.	A slanderous person.
Me-kura.	A blind man.
Yo-ake.	The dawn.
Hara-t'ami.	Stomach-ache.
Ido-hori.	A well-digger.

4. It is formed also by combining a verb with a noun.

Fumi-ishi.	A stool.
Tsu-ishi.	A stepping stone.
Ki-mono.	Clothing.
Iri-kuchi.	Entrance.
Kare-ki.	A withered tree.

THE PRONOUN.

THE PERSONAL PRONOUN.

Strictly speaking, the personal pronouns of the first person are a, are, wa, ware and wara, of which ware is most commonly used; and of the second person, na, nare, minashi and imashi, of which nanji, a word undoubtedly derived from na, is most commonly used. All others are nouns used pronominally. Of these, for the first person, anore, watakushi, temae, mi, mizukaru, yatsugare, soyega-shi, warawa, &c. are of Japanese origin, and sessha, jibun, jishin, boku, shōsei, &c. are of Chinese origin; and for the second person, ommi, omoe, otemae, sonata, anata, okoto, kimi, kisama, &c. are of Japanese origin, and gozeu, kikō, kiden, kikun, kika, sokka, kei, tokka, &c. are of Chinese origin. The plurals for the first and the second persons are formed like nouns. Of the former, warera, wareware, midomo, watakushira, wataku-shidomo, botu-ru, jibunra, and wagahai, and of the latter, omote-tachi, anatagata, kimira, kimigata, keira and shokun, are most common. The personal pronouns of the third person most commonly used,—a, are and ano, ka, kare and kano, ko, kore and kono; and so, sore and sono, with their plurals arera, karera, korera and sorera,—are in their nature demonstrative pronouns. Various Chinese expressions, too numerous to be mentioned here, are used in lieu of the above.

In both the spoken and the written languages, it is thought elegant to use as few pronouns as practicable, and for that reason, in places where the meaning is clear without employing them, they are usually omitted.

THE DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUN.

Ko, kore, kono and koko, so, sore, sono and soko, a, are, ano and asuka, ka, kare, kano and kashiko, with the plurals, karera, kokora, sorera, sokora, arera, asukora, karera and kashikora, constitute demonstrative pronouns. The distinctions of ko, so and a or ka are shown in the following examples:

Kono basho or koko .	This place.
Sono basho or soko .	That place (with reference to a place in the vicinity of the person spoken to)

Kano basho or kashiko. Yonder place (with reference to a place remote from the speaker and the person spoken to).

THE DISTRIBUTIVE PRONOUN.

Distributive pronouns are ono ono, mei mei, o-tagai and sore-sore.

The Japanese language has no relative pronouns.

THE INTERROGATIVE PRONOUN.

Interrogative pronouns are ta, tare or dare, nani, dore, dochira, izure and izuko.

Ano hito wa tare naru ka. Who is he?

Sonata wa nani wo kurishi ka. What did you send?

Izure ga ware no naru ka. Which is mine?

Dochira ga yoki ka. Which is better?

When the particle mo or demo is added, these pronouns are often taken in an indefinite or distributive sense.

Dare mo shiranu. No one knows.

Dare mo sore ni aetamuranu. None fits it.

Daredemo. Any one.

Dochirademo goroshi. Either will answer.

THE ADJECTIVE.

There are two kinds of adjectives which change their endings to show their relations to other words. One is formed by adding ki, ku and shi to its root or stem, as taka ki, taka-ku and taka-shi; the other, by adding shiki, shiku and shi, as hage-shiki, hage-shiku and hage-shi.

Takaki yoma. A high mountain.

Takaku sobiyu. (It) stands up loftily.

Yama wa takashi. The mountain is high.

Hageshiki tatakai. A furious battle.

Hageshiku tatakau. (They) fight furiously.

Tatakai wa hageshi. The battle is furious.

Some think that the second kind of adjective is only a modified form of the first, their argument being that the double use of shi is avoided for euphony's sake when the root or stem ends in shi.

Adjectives that end in ki or shiki are always placed before the nouns that they limit or qualify; in other words, they are used attributively.

Those that end in ku or shiku are placed before the verbs of whose subjects they are predicated, or whose action they qualify; that is, they are used predicatively or adverbially.

Sore wa yoku aranu. It is not good.

Kodomo wo ashiku atsukau. He treats children badly.

They are also placed before adjectives like English adverbs:

Kibishiku samuki. Severely cold.

The prefix ku or shiku is very often used to perform the office of a conjunction, when the form of the last attributive word in a sentence ends in shi.

Kare wa tsuyoku, nime He is strong, handsome y ku, tate takashi. and tall.

Kaze araku, nami taku- The wind is violent, and
shi. the waves are high.

This form is sometimes called the indefinite form of the adjective.

Adjectives with the suffix shi are used at the close of a sentence, and are placed directly after the nouns that they limit or qualify. Unlike the English usage, the verb to be is never interposed between the noun and the adjective in this form. Thus, in the sentence "Yama wa (the mountain) takashi (is high)," "takashi" is equivalent to the two words "is high" in English. The literal colloquial translation of "the mountain is high" into Japanese would be "Yama wa takaku aru," and in such a method of construction the predicative form ku must be used. "Yama wa takashi," or in the colloquial, "Yama wa takai," is, however, a more common expression.

In the colloquial, k is often dropped in ki and ku, and also in shiki and shiku, as yoi (yoki), and yuu or yū (yoku), and warui (waruki), and warui or warū (waruku); and sh is often dropped in shi as yoi (yoshi) and warui (warushi).

When the verb aru (to be) is added to adjectival forms in ku or shiku, the adjective partakes of the nature of the verb, and its new suffix changes in accordance with its special rule of inflection; as takaku-aran or takakaran, takaku-ari or takakari, takaku-aru or takakaru, and takakure or takakare. When the particles ba, do and domo are added to this compound form, are changes into ere, as takakereba, takakeredo and takakeredomo. But such constructions as takakareba, takakaredo and takakaredomo, though logical in form, are seldom used.

Nouns sometimes perform the office of adjectives when they are followed by the particle no.

Kin no tokei. A gold watch

Mugaku no hito. An illiterate person.

Nouns, or the stem words of adjectives, sometimes perform the office of adverbs, when they are followed by the particle ni.

Makoto ni. Truly.

Akiraka ni. Clearly.

When the verb aru (to be) is added to these, the resulting words behave like a verb, the new suffix aru being its attributive form.

Makoto-ni-aru,
maotonaru hanashi. } A true story.

Akiraka-ni-aru,
akirakanaru kotogara. } A clear matter.

In the colloquial, naru contracts into na.

Nouns, when followed by the particle to and the verb aru, and verbs, when followed by the particle te and the verb aru, act like adjectives, taking the attributive form of the latter verb.

Otoko-to-aru,
otokotaru mono. } One who is a man.

Boku-to-aru,
bakutaru rondai. } An obscure statement

Koete aru,
koetarū buta. } A fat pig.

Kare-te-aru,
karetaru eda. } A withered branch.

When the auxiliary suffixes, beki, taki, naki and rashiki, are added to nouns or verbs, the resulting words become regular adjectives.

Homubeki hito. A praiseworthy parson.

Togetaki nozomi. A fondly entertained hope.

Hakana'ni inochi. An evanescent life.

Otokorashiki okonai. Manly conduct.

Adjectives have no inflected forms of comparison. The comparative and superlative ideas are usually expressed by the aid of some postpositions and adverbs, as yori, nao and mottomo. In many cases, the mood must be judged from the context.

When the three forms of the adjective are followed by different particles, they express different moods.

Aki wa kanashi. Autumn is gloomy.

Ano hon wa ōi ni omoshiro-kariki. That book was very interesting.

Kare wa nemutakaran. He will be sleepy.

Nigakutomo kono kusuri yo nome. Drink the medicine,
though bitter.

Yukitakuba yuke. Go, if you please.

The attributive form, ki or shiki, becomes the substantive form when the noun following it is understood. Then, like the noun, it allows the particle, wa, wo, ni, yori or made to follow. When it is followed by kana or naru, it becomes a conclusive form.

Hito wa kurushiki wo konomazu. Man does not like pain.

Sukunaki wa naki yori
yoshi. Few is better than nothing.

Samuki ni ojizu. {I am} not afraid of cold.

Takai yori h'kuki made. From high to low.

When the predicative or adverbial form ku or shiku is followed by ba, it becomes a conditional form. When it is followed by tomo, it becomes a concessive form. When it is followed by te, it performs a participle.

When the conclusive form shi is followed by to, it becomes a concessive or a conjunctive form.

Sometimes, the particle no follows the root or stem, and is used in the same sense as ki.

Yokubuka no yakko. An avaricious fellow.
Osoroshi no yuzetsu. Wonderful bow-drawing strength.

Sometimes the root or stem is followed by the suffix mi; then it becomes either a noun of quality, or a participle.

Atami. A tinge of red.
Yama takami. The mountain being high.

Sometimes the root or stem has the suffix sa; then it becomes either a noun of quality, or an adjectival form with an interjectional significance.

Samusa. Coldness.
Aji no yosa. Goodness of taste.
Miru ga kanashisa. Sad to see.

When beki, or beshi is added to the conclusive form of the verb, the resulting word may be used as an adjective, expressing command or possibility. The same is true of conclusive verbal forms to which is added majiki or maji, the significance imparted in this case being one of future negation. Thus beki, beshi, majiki and maji may be called auxiliary adjectival suffixes. Another adjectival suffix is rashiki, rashi, which conveys the sense of like, as does also the auxiliary adjective gotoki or gotoshi.

Buta wa kubeshi. Pork is eatable.
Warubeki kotogara. Laughable matter.
Hanarumoziki kankei. Inseparable relation.
Tsuwamoto wa undaite mazi. The valiant is undaunted.
Furushiki hiyori. The weather that seems to rain.

Hana chirurashi. The flower seems to fall.

MANY ADJECTIVES ARE COMPOUNDED OF DIFFERENT PARTS OF SPEECH.

1. Such a compound may be formed by the combination of a noun with an adjective.

Kokoro-yasuki. Easy-hearted or friendly.
Hara-guroki. Black-hearted or malignant.
Shimbō zuyokki. Strong in patience.

2. It may also be formed by the combination of a verb with an adjective.

At-gataki. Difficult to meet.
Kiki-gurushiki. Disagreeable to hear.
Mima-hoshiki. Desirous of seeing.

3. It may also be formed by the combination of an adjectival root with an adjective.

Uru-guroki. Light black.
Naga bosoki. Long and narrow.
Fuka m-dori naru. Deep-green.

THE NUMERAL.

CARDINAL NUMBERS.

Of these, there are two sets, one of Japanese, and the other of Chinese, origin. The Japanese set from one to nine are formed by suffixing tsu to the stem-word of each. Special forms for numbers above ten are now obsolete, and are used only in poetry or in classical writings. The particle no is commonly placed between numerals and the nouns that they limit. Strictly considered, the numerals are to be regarded as nouns, and not as adjectives. Sometimes their stem-words, combining with nouns, form compound words. The Chinese set are also in general use. They usually form compound words, combining with the nouns that they limit.

Indicative Present.—The third base, or the conclusive form itself, and also nari added to it, represent the present tense indicate; as yuku, niru, ukuru and sunari. Zu or nu added to the first base produces the negative form, as yukazu, nizu, ukezu, and sezu.

Indicative Past.—Of the past there are four forms. The first is formed by adding ki to the second base, as yukki, niki, ukeki and shiki. In the place of ki, keri is often used. The second is formed by adding nu or tsu to the second base, as yukinu, niru, uketsu and shitsu. As a past, this form has a lighter significance than the former, and somewhat resembles the English perfect tense. The third is formed by adding te and ari or tari to the second base; as yukitari, nitari, uketari and shitari. The colloquial form of tari is ta. These first and third forms of the past are now used indiscriminately. The fourth is formed by adding tari and ki, or tariki, to the second base, as yukitariki, nitariki, uketariki and shitariki. This corresponds to the English pluperfect.

Indicative Negative Past.—Formed by adding zu and ariki or zariki to the first base; as yakazariki, nizariki, ukezariki and sezariki. In some places, the forms yukananda, ninanda, ukenanda and senanda are used in the colloquial.

Indicative Future.—Formed by adding n or ma-shi to the first base, nan to the second base, ran to the third base, and ni and aran or nanan to the fourth base; as yukan, aramashi, ninan, ukuran and surunaran. In the colloquial, in the place of aran, darō is used. When meri or rashi is added to the third base, the hypothetical future is expressed.

Indicative Future Perfect.—Formed by adding ken, kerashi, laran, tsuran or nuran to the second base; as yukiken, arikerashi, nitaran, uketsuran and shinuran.

Indicative Negative Future.—Formed by adding zu and aran or zaran to the first base; as yukazaran, nizaran, ukezaran and sezaran.

Conjunctive, or Conditional Present.—Formed by adding ba to the fifth base, as yukeba, nireba, uke-reba and sureba. Its negative is formed by adding zareba and neba to the first base, as yukazareba, nizarareba, ukenareba and senareba.

Conjunctive, or Conditional Past.—Formed by adding shikaba, keraba or tareba to the second base; as yukishikaba, nishikaba, ukekereba and shitareba. Its negative is formed by adding zarishikaba or zarikereba to the first base; as yukazarishikaba, nizarishikaba, ukezarikereba and sezarikereba.

Conditional Hypothetical Present.—Formed by adding ba to the first base, naba to the second base; and naraba to the fourth base; as yukaba, niba, ukenaba and surunaraba. Its negative is formed by adding zaba to the first base; as yukazaba, nizaba, ukezaba and sezaba.

Conditional Hypothetical Past.—Formed by adding taraba and shinoraba to the second base; as yuktaraba, nitaraba, ukeshinaraba and seshinaraba. Its negative is formed by adding zariseba or zarishinaraba to the first base; as yukazariseba, nizariseba, ukezarishinaraba and sezarishinaraba.

Concessive Present.—Formed by adding do or domo to the fifth base; as yukedo, niredo, ukuredo and swredo. Its negative is formed by adding zare do or nedo (very often mo after the latter); to the first base; as yukazaredo, nizaredo, ukenedo and senedomo.

Concessive Past.—Formed by adding shikado, keredo or shinaredo (very often mo after the last), to the second base, as yukishikado, ukeredo, uketaredo and seshinaredo. Its negative is formed by adding zarishikado, zarikeredo or zarishinaredo, or mo after each, to the first base; as yukazarishikado, nizarishikadomo, ukezarikeredo and sezarishinaredo.

Concessive Hypothetical Present.—Formed by adding mo or tomo to the third base; as yukumo, nirumo, ukurumoto and surumoto. Its negative is formed by adding zumo, zutomo, zarumo or zarumoto to the first base; as yukazumo, nizutomo, ukezarumo and sezarumoto.

Concessive Hypothetical Past.—Formed by adding temo or taritomo or shitomo to the second base; as yukitemo, nitemo, uketaritomo and seshitomo. Its negative is formed by adding zarishittomo to the first base; as yukazarishittomo, nizarishittomo, ukezarishittomo and sezarishittomo.

Imperative.—In the four-grade and R column conjugations, the fifth base itself is the imperative form. Sometimes ya is added to it; as yuke or yukeya and are or areya. In the N column conjugations the new base e is used for this form, and yo is added to it; as ineyo and shineyo. To the others, yo is added to the first base; as niyo, keyo, kuyo, ukeyo, koyo and seyo. The Negative Imperative is formed by adding zare to the first base of each conjugation; as yukazare, nizare, kezare, kuzare, ukezare, kozare, sezare, inazare and arazare.

For expressing desire, nan or baya is added to the first base; as yukanan, ninan, ukebana and sebaya.

When to the second base te is added, the form signifies a relation either of causation or of sequence. This form some call a gerund, and others, a participle. Thus:

* The second base of the S column conjugation is shi, but when the particle shi comes immediately after it, it always changes into se.

Yuki-te niyo. Going see, or see by going.

Haru sugi-te, natsu kitaru. Spring having gone, summer comes.

When to the first base, de, zude or zushite is added, it becomes the negative form of the above; as yukade, yukazude or yukazushite.

When to the second base, tsutsu is added, the form signifies an action taking place continuously with another.

O'ori wo mi-tsutsu eta (I) listen singing while wo itku seeing dancing.
Nayeki tsu tsu hito yo (I) passed one night
wo akaseri. grieving.

TRANSITIVE, INTRANSITIVE AND CAUSATIVE.

The same forms of verbs rarely express different meanings at the same time. There are, however, various relations existing between different forms of verbs of the same origin, as will be seen from the following examples.

Intransitive.

Four grade.	{	Tatsu (to stand).
		Susumu (to advance).
		Noku (to withdraw).
		Ukabu (to float).
Lower two-grade.	{	Kudakuru (to be broken to pieces).
		Yakuru (to burn).
		Kiruru (to be severed).
		Shiruru (to be known).
Lower two-grade.	{	Koyuru (to be fertile).
		Hatsuru (to ead.)
		Tobu (to fly)
		Karuru (to wither).
Upper two-grade.	{	Otsuru (to fall).
		Ozuru (to be afraid).
		Oruru (to go down).
		Horoburu (to be ruined).
Upper two-grade.	{	Mijuru (to appear).
		Niyuru (to boil).
Four-grade.	{	Okoru , (to rise).
		Kaeru (to return).
		Naoru (to be healed).
		Nokoru (to remain).
Lower two-grade.	{	Kakururu (to be hid).
		Kegaruru (to be polluted).
		Najaruru (to flow).
		Midururu (to be disturbed).

Transitive.

Lower two grade.	{	Tatsuru (to erect).
		Susunuru (to advance).
		Nokuru (to withdraw).
		Ukaburu (to make float).
Four-grade.	{	Kudaku (to break to pieces)
		Yaku (to burn).
		Kiru (to cut).
		Shiru (to know).
Four-grade.	{	Koyasu (to fertilize).
		Hatasu (to put an end to).
		Tobasu (to let fly).
		Karasu (to make wither).
Four-grade.	{	Otosu (to let fall).
		Odosu (to make afraid).
		Orosu (to let go down).
		Horobosu (to ruin).
Upper one-grade.	{	Miru (to see).
		Niru (to boil).
Four-grade.	{	Okosu (to raise).
		Kaesu (to send back).
		Naosu (to heal).
		Nokosu (to leave).
Four-grade.	{	Kakusu (to hide).
		Kegasu (to pollute).
		Nagasu (to let flow).
		Midasu (to disturb).

From these last cases, it will be evident that the suffix ru is the contracted form of the verb aru (to be), and the suffix su is that of the verb suru (to do or make).

Sometimes aru or oru added to transitives changes them into intransitives; thus:

Transitives.	Intransitives.
Sa-tamuru (to settle).	Sidamaru (to be settled).
Kata-muru (to harden).	Katamaru (to become burdened).
Hiro-guru (to extend)	Hirogaru (to extend over)

Transitives.	Intransitives.
Sou-ru (to add).	Sowaru (to be annexed).
Kom-ru (to shut up).	Komoru (to be shut up).
Tsum-ru (to fill).	Tsumoru (to accumulate).

Causative verbs are formed by adding to the first base of the four-grade, of the N column and of the R column, conjugations, suru or shimuru, and to the same base of the other conjugations, sasuru or shimuru. Sometimes in the one-grade conjugation, sesasu or sesshimuru is added. Thus:

Yuku. Yuka suru or yuka shimuru.
Niru. Ni-sasuru or ni-shimuru.

Keru.	Ke-s-suru or ke-shimuru.
Kuru.	Ku-s-suru or kui-shimuru.
Uuru.	Uke-s-suru or uke-shimuru.
Kuru.	Ko-s-suru or ko-shimuru.
Suru.	Se-s-suru or se-shimuru.
Inuru.	Ina-suru or ina-shimuru.
Aru.	Ara-suru or ara-shimuru.
Miru.	Mi-s-suru or mi sesh miru.

Causative verbs are formed from both intransitive and transitive verbs; thus:

Intras.	Intrans.	Caus.	Trans.	Trans.	Caus.
Kaeru.	Kaerasu.	Kaesu.	Kaerasu.
Nagayuru.	Nagayemasu.	Nagasu.	Nogasasu.
Tatsu.	Tatasu.	Tatsuru.	Tatesasu.
Noku.	Nokasu.	Nokuru.	Nokesasu.

Causatives are always verbs of the lower two grade conjugation.

A close observer will naturally see that derivative transitive verbs ending in su, are already of a causative nature. Probably they were once intransitive causative verbs, which, having suffered functional changes, passed from their causative import to their present transitive.

PASSIVE, POTENTIAL AND HONORIFIC VERBS.

Passive verbs are formed by adding ru to the first base of the four-grade verb, and ru to the first base of the one grade, two-grade and S column verbs; thus:

Kaku (to write).	Kaka-ru .
Miru (to see).	Mi-ru .
Keru (to kick).	Ke-ru .
Mukuru (to reward).	Muki-ru .
Ukuru (to receive).	Uke-ru .
Suru (to do).	Se-ru .

Unlike the English usage, passive verbs are often formed from intransitive verbs. In that case, apart from the verbs of the different conjugations mentioned above, ru is to be added to the first base of the N column and R column verbs, and ru to the first base of the K column verbs, they being all intransitive verbs.

Inu (to go away).	Ina-ru .
Aru (to be).	Ara-ru .
Kuru (to come).	Ko-ru .

To illustrate the various relations of these verbs, let us take the verb semuru. It is a transitive verb, and means to storm. The intransitive verb semaru is derived from the same root, and means to press upon. Each of these two verbs has its passive form.

Teki ga shiro wo semu. The enemy storm the castle.

Teki ga shiro ni semaru.	The enemy press upon the castle.
Shiro ga teki ni semararu.	The castle is stormed by the enemy, or, merely.
Shiro wo teki ni semaru.	Have had the castle stormed by the enemy (lit.)
Teki ni shiro ni semararu.	To have one's castle attacked (lit. pressed upon) by the enemy.

These relations manifestly show that the English terms transitive and intransitive, active and passive, cannot be applied to Japanese verbs in their strict sense. Passive verbs all belong to the lower two grade conjugation.

Potential verbs have the same forms as passive. In the colloquial, however, potentials and passives often take different forms; thus:

Kiwareru (is eaten).	Kueru (can eat or can be eaten).
Kawareru (is bought).	Kaeru (can buy or can be bought).
Utareru (is stricken).	Utareru (can strike).

Honorific verbs have the forms of the causative and passive verbs. The reason assigned for this is that persons of high rank do not themselves do things, but have them done for them by others.

As for the theory of the formation of causative, passive and potential verbs, space forbids us to discuss it here.

THE POSTPOSITION.

Japanese postpositions correspond to English prepositions. Nouns undergo no inflectional case changes under any circumstances.

I. Wa is commonly used to indicate the nominative case. More correctly, it is simply an isolating particle, and since a negative verb logically excludes its subject, the latter is usually followed by wa.

Yama wa takashi.	The mountain is high.
Asu wa hoyaku okiyo.	To-morrow, ri-early.
A'u wa nasu nakare.	Evils, do not do.

II. No and ga are used nearly in the same place. They have five different uses.

1. They have the meaning of "belonging to" and then they are possessive, or genitive, particles.

Teki no jin-di.	The enemy's camp.
Kimi ga yo.	The Emperor's reign.

2. They have the meaning of "being of or in."

Kita no megane. Spectacles (of) gold, or gold spectacles.

Makoto no hanashi. A story of truth, or a true story.

Sore ga hitobito. These men.

3. They have the meaning of "existing in."

Suruga no Fuji. Fuji in Suruga.

Ezo ga shima. The islands of Ezo.

These two last (2) and (3), have, in Japanese, the sense of "nite aru" and "niaru" which often contract into naru, an adjectival particle. No and ga in such uses, are, therefore, adjectival particles.

4. They are used as appositional particles.

Sangwatsu no tsuki. The month, March.

Kikai ga shima. The isle, Kikai.

Here also no and ga have the same sense as naru, and may be classed as adjectival particles.

No and ga in all these different senses may be rendered "of" in translating them into English, without much violation of sense.

5. They simply express the relation of one person or thing to another in time or place

Ie no mae. The front of a house.

Ame ga shita. The under-domain of heaven; or the domain under the heavens

No and ga sometimes designate the nominative case.

Inu no hoyuru. A dog howls.

In this example, hoyuru takes the attributive form, and it may be considered that a noun, as "koto," is understood after it. The sentence may be thus changed:

Inu no hoyuru (koto yo). The howling of a dog!

Here, no has a genitive sense. In the same way, the nominative particle ga may be considered as the genitive, which has changed its use.

Hito ga yuku. A man goes.

Hito ga yuku (koto yo). The going of a man!

In old classical writings, tsu was used in the place of no.

Ama tsu kami. The gods of heaven.

III. Wo is generally used as the accusative particle.

Nōfu ga hatake wo suku, The farmer ploughs the field.

IV. Te and ni.—

Te is a dative particle, equivalent to "to," "towards," or "at."

Ni is also a dative particle, having the same sense as "in," "to" or "on."

Kita ye yuku. To go to, or towards, the north.

Yado ni tomaru. To lodge in a hotel.

Tōkyō ye (ni) tsuku. To arrive at (in) Tōkyō.

In some places, we must take special precaution to find out the true signification of ni.

Teki ni katsu. To conquer the enemy.

Here the English form is accusative, and ni takes the place of wo. Katsu is not, however, a transitive verb, as many grammarians think. Ni may be considered as equivalent to "to."

Teki ni makuru. To be defeated by the enemy. Here the English verb takes the passive form, and then, ni should correspond to by. The Japanese verb, however, is intransitive, and as before, ni may be considered equivalent to "to."

Ni has various other uses.

1. It has the sense of "by" when it is used before the passive verb.

Inu ni kamaruru. To be bitten by a dog.

2. It is also used in the sense of "for."

San yen ni uru. To sell for three dollars

Ryokō ni yōsuru kane. Money required for travelling.

Hanami ni yuku. To go for seeing (to see) flowers.

3. When ni comes after the conclusive form of the verb, it has the same force as the English infinitive.

Iu ni yasuki. Easy to say.

Okonau ni kataki. Difficult to do.

4. When it comes after the attributive form of the verb, it is used in the sense of "while."

Hi wa sru ni, waga ko While the sun sets, my wa imada kaerazu. son does not return.

5. It is used for enumerating things.

Tsuki ni, yuki ni hana. The moon, snow and flowers.

6. It is used between repetition of the same word for emphasis.

Hi ni hi ni. Daily.

Furi ni furu. Raining and raining.

7. Many adverbs are formed by adding ni to substantive words.

Makoto-ni. Truly.

Akiraka-ni. Clearly.

V. Yori and kara are ablative particles, and are equivalent to "from."

Hito yori ukuru. To receive from a person.
Ten kara kudaru. To come down from heaven.

Yori is also used in the sense of the conjunction than.

Sore yori yoki. Better than that.

Kara is also used in the sense of "because," and in that case, always follows the attributive form of the verb.

Fuku kara mate. Wait, because (I) go (i.e. "wait; I am going.")

VI. Made has the same uses as the preposition to," and the conjunction "till."

Ôsaka made yuku. To go to Ôsaka.
Haru no kuru made mate. Wait till spring comes.

VII. To is used in various senses.

1. It is used in the sense of "as."

Yuki wo hana to miru. To see snow as flowers.

2. It is used in the sense of "like."

Ame arare to tobu. To fly like rain and hail.

3. It is used in the sense of "with."

Fune to shizumu. To sink with the boat.

4. It is used in the sense of "and."

Chichi to haha. Father and mother.

5. It is placed between repetitions of the same word for emphasis.

Ari to araguru. All that there is.

6. It is used in the sense of "if."

Hito wo anadoru to, If (you) despise others,
hito ni anadoraruru. (you) will be despised by others.

7. Some adverbs are formed by adding to to substantive words.

Shika-to. Certainly.

VIII. Nite or de has the following uses.

1. It is a predicative particle.

Kane wa waga na nite Kane is my name.
(de) owasu.

2. It is equivalent to "in."

Sono sara wo shina That dish (I) bought in nite (de) kaeri. China.

Sometimes the subject is understood. In such a case de must not be mistaken for a nominative particle.

Amerika de atai wo (Some one) pays the price
harau, in America.

3. It has the meaning of "with."

Teppô de utsu. To shoot with a gun.

IX. Zo is a more isolating particle than wa.
Tsuki zo yoki. The moon is fair.

X. Nan has nearly the same use with zo.

Kaku nan arikeru. Thus it was.

XI. Koso is the strongest isolating particle.

Hito koso shirane. Man does not know.

XII. Shi is used as a sort of auxiliary particle for emphasis or euphony.

Toki shi nakereba. As there is not time.

In the colloquial, it is sometimes used in the sense of "moreover," or "saying that."

Haru mo kita shi. Saying that spring has come.

XIII. Mo is an adverbial particle, corresponding to "also," "too" and "even."

Kare mo eiji nari. He also is an Englishman.

Sore mo yoshi. It is good, too.

Tori mo kayowanu The sea of Genkai, over genkainaka. which even birds do not cross.

It is also used in the sense of "both . . . and,"

Otoko mo onna mo. Both men and women.

XIV. Dani, sae and sura are adverbial particles corresponding to "even."

Tori dani on wo shiru While even birds is know ni, nanji wa ikan. gratitude, how it is with you?

Ame no furu ni kaze While the rain is falling,
sae fuku. even the wind is blowing.

Kusaki sura toki wo Even grasses and trees
shiru. know the time.

XV. Nomi is an adverbial particle corresponding to "only."

Yoki wo nomi eramu. (I) select only that which is good.

XVI. Bakari is an adverbial particle corresponding to "only" or "about."

Sukoshi bakari. Only a little.

Sen yen bakari. About a thousand dollars.

XVII. Nagara is an adverbial particle, corresponding to "while," "at the same time," "together with," "however" and "though I is."

Hanashi nagara naku. To weep while talking.

Futari nagara. Both together.

Sarinagara or shikashi- Thought it is so, or while nagara. it is so, or however.

Onna nagara sono itu- Though a woman, how yosa. strong she is.

XVIII. Gatera has nearly the same meaning as nagara, and corresponds to "while."

Yuk-gatera. While going.

XIX. Sigara is an adverbial particle, corresponding to "while" and "during." It comes from the verb sigaru (to pass).

Yo mo-sigara. During the night.

Michi sigara. While on the way.

XX. Gate-ni is an adverbial particle, signifying some difficulty. It comes from the adjective katuki (difficult).

Yukigate-nt omou. To think it difficult to go.

XXI. Goto-ni is an adverbial particle, having a distributive sense.

Hito goto-ni. Every person. [comes].

Kuru goto-ni. Every time I come, or (he

XXII. Mani-mani or mama is an adverbial particle, used in the sense of "according as."

Kami no mani-mani. According as God wills.

XXIII. Zutsu is a particle used in enumeration.

Hitotsu zutsu. One by one

XXIV. Dake or take coming from the word taka (quantity) is a particle used for expressing quantity.

Dore dake.

How much?

Nara take.

As much as possible.

This word may be classified as a noun, together with hodo, kurai, toki, koro, tokoro, &c.

XXV. Nado, to and ya are the particles used for expressing plurality. The former two are often used in the sense of "so and so."

Fujin nado no shiru It is a matter that women

tokoro ni arazu. cannot understand.

Kin, gin, to. Gold, silver, etc.

Musuko ra. Sons.

XXVI. Ki, tsuru, nuru, ran, rashi, meri, to, tono, bo, do, domo, de, zu, nu, &c. as particles belonging to adjectives and verbs, have been already mentioned.

XXVII. Na and nakare, particles used for negative command, correspond to "not."

Nusumu nakare. Do not steal.

Okotaru na. Be not idle.

When na occurs in the middle of a sentence, the latter is closed with the particle so.

Hito na koroshi so. Do not kill a man.

XXVIII. Ka and ya are used for asking questions. Ka should follow the attributive forms of adjectives and verbs, and ya, their conclusive forms.

When ka and ya occur before verbs, there are certain definite relations existing between those particles and the closing forms of the verbs. Such relations will be presently shown.

There are also uses of ku and ya where contrary answers are to be expected.

Tsuki ya aranu. Is there not a moon?

Nani ka wamin. What should (I) complain of?

Kawa and yawa are also used in such cases.

After interrogative pronouns and adjectives, zo is often used as a closing particle.

Kare wa nanu hito zo. Who is he?

Ikahodo no atai zo. How much is the price.

Interjectional Particles.—A, ana, ara, are, awa, re, appare, ide, iza, haya, yayo, ya, &c. are used independently of other words, or directly before them. Ya, yo, ka, kano, kamo, &c. are used after substantive words. They may be considered as the vocative particles of nouns, Na, wa, wa, kashi, gana, gana, &c. are also used in the similar places.

The auxiliary verbal and adjectival suffixes that can be declined like verbs and adjectives proper are not mentioned in the above paradigm.

THE ADVERB.

Most Japanese adverbs are derived words. Those that we may classify as true adverbs are as follow: tada, mina, katsu, hata, mata, nao, ani, hobo, yaya, sukoburu, kanarazu, oyoso, ito, mottomo, moppare, hanahada isasaka, adakamo, shibashi, shibaraku, tachimachi, yōyaku, kaku, &c.

Some adverbs are formed by reduplication, as, ma ma, koto-gotoku, tsura-tsura, tsuku-zuku, somo-somo, hoto-hodo or hotondo, naka-naka, kaesugaezu, koma-goma, tori-dori, hisa-bisa, haru-baru, hi-bi, tsuki-zuki, nichi-nichi, nen-nen, pachi-pachi, potsu-potsu, &c.

Nouns are sometimes used adverbially, as ima, mukashi, kyō, kinō, hitotabi, futatabi, taitei, taigai, hikkyo, tō-tei, &c.

Pronouns are sometimes used adverbially, as sore and kore.

Adverbs are often formed by the aid of particles, as has been already said.

1. By adding ni to nouns or substantive words, as makoto-ni, toki-ni, sava-ni, akiraka-ni, &c.

2. By adding to to substantive words, as shika-to, toku to, koma-goma-to, hiro-biro-to, &c.

3. By adding te to verbs, as sadame-te, hajime-te, kaeri-te or kaette, ae-te, &c.

The adverbial forms of adjectives and postpositions have been already mentioned, and hence need no recapitulation here.

THE CONJUNCTION.

Conjunctions are also derived mostly from nouns and verbs. Some words used as adverbs are used as conjunctions also. Such words are mata, hata, katsu and nao. Besides these, a few words such as moshi, kedashi, tadashi and sunawachi belong to conjunctions proper.

Toki, hodo, tokoro, mama, uchi, &c. are nouns used as conjunctions.

Different conjunctions are formed by adding various particles to forms of verbs, as sara-ba, sara-ba, sare do, saru-ni, shikara-ba, shikare-ba, shikare-do, shikaru-ni, shika-shite or sōshite, sari-te or sate, kaeri-te or kaette, yori-te or yotte, shita-gai-te or shitagatte, mashi te, &c.

Soreyueni, karugayueni, shikashinagara, ikan-tonareba, shikari-to-edomo, &c. are the phrases used as conjunctions.
